Leonard-Mitchell Bout in Garden Jan. 14 Will Be Attended by New York's Aristocracy. -

HE Leonard-Mitchell battle for the lightweight championship of the world Jan. 14 in the Garden will have the aristocratic setting of a big evening at the opera-The Metropolitan's famous diamond shoe will have a new rival on this occasion when society will sit in to see Benny and Ritchie match their amsortment of wallops. The proceeds of the bout will be applied to the Fund for Dovastated France. Miss Anne Morgan is an active worker for this relief fund, and it was chiefly through her efforts that the two leading lightweights were brought to-

It was only the intervention of Miss Morgan and her society committee that made the Leonard-Mitchell fight posrible. Several professional promoters had turned handsprings trying to settle the match, but made miserable failures. Several weeks age Leonard, his manager, Mitchell's maimger and Tex Rickard were inwited to the Morgan home. In the colebrated library, surrounded with priveless books and statuary, where the elder Morgan transacted some of the greatest financial deals in the world's history, the little group of society workers and boxing principals settled all details for the coming burnts.

This meeting made a big impres-sion on Leonard, especially the fall-tire of the liveried butler to give a brass check when he took Benny's

After the signing of contracts Miss Morgan's committee promptly set about to realize the maximum amount from the bout by auctioning the boxes. The Wall Street section responded briefly at the first sale, and the second auction will take place in the grand ballroom of the Commodore Thursday afternoon at 6 o'clock.

Departure, 1931, by The Press Publishing Co. (The New York Sweeting World.)

Before Bill Brennan jabs his signature on a vaudeville contract he should lamp the theatrical memoirs of Mr. Jack Dempsey. As a calclum attraction Jack was a skyrocket. After six one-week stands the management threw a wet towel into the footlights. They claimed Jack might knock 'em stiff in the ring, but not in the playhouse. The referee once counted ten at Toledo and declared Jack a champion fighter. But the box office man would count ten in the theatre and declare Jack a champion flivver. And eight of the ten were on passes at that.

The management figured Jack would do a monologue and the audience would do the fighting to get in. They were wrong. A Mon-day night audience would consist of eighteen ushers and the piano player, for a total of mineteen. The audience was smaller at Detroit, where the house had an automatic plane player. The Saturday night crowd was always larger, because the Sheriffs would come around

Jack's tour with the show was the toughest road work he ever did. He made a weak stand in every city. You can't put a hard-boiled fighter into a hard-boiled shirt and make a genteel actor out of him. The only part of a dress suit outfit that tooked at all natural on Jack were the gloves—the six-ounce kind. The trouble with Dempsey's show was that there wasn't enough punch to it. The only guy that did any punching was the ticket taker at the door, and they didn't keep him very busy. Jack was full of talk, but that wasn't what the people wanted. When the people want talk they go to Bryan's road show.

Dempsey's tour ended in Philadelphia. The size of the audience would make an average Shibe Park attendance look like the World's Series was being played there. At the end of the Philadelphia week the management paid off Jack in postage stamps. They told him the tour was cancelled, but forgot to tell him the stamps were too.

Now that Jack is back fighting again, he would prefer to take on a few theatrical managers for a starter and then he'll tackle dramatio critics. He has ordered two cases of Nix-ain't-it Iron and a series of half-page advertisements to start off his training. And hereafter when Jack appears before the public the stage hands are the orchestra plays a bell at three-minute intervals.
